What's Next in the Wingellina Social Plan Process

Today, some Project stakeholders are different to those of 2012, and it is important that they have their say too.

There will be more discussions and consultation during the next phase of project development, the Definitive Feasibility Study.

Future Prospects

In 2012 the community had a strong affection for Wingellina and the way of life including traditions, hunting and bush tucker.

However, they felt that the infrastructure was poorly maintained, incomes were low, and opportunities and service were limited.

In 2012, most people seemed to accept the relocation of the community and expressed 'sadness' about leaving their homes, (leaving behind hills and land). They expected that Wingellina should have services as other communities of the similar size and location.

There are opportunities for the community to benefits from mining. This requires increased education and training of residents.
